WILLIAM J. DAVISON	Coach

THE season of 1924 seemed to promise success for the wrestling team as it entered its third year as a minor sport, but eligibility proved a great obstacle, preventing Captain Allan, Vedro, and Goldsand from getting into action, men whose absence was keenly felt.

In a crippled condition, Syracuse held the Brooklyn Polytechnic grapplers to a tie but went down to defeat before the Columbia artists, 21 to 5.

Penn State, likely candidate for intercollegiate honors, was victorious by a large score, although they were able to secure but two falls, the other points being secured by decisions.

Undismayed by previous defeats, Syracuse met Colgate at Hamilton in the first wrestling match ever held between the two institutions, and after a thrilling battle was victorious 16 to 15. A return match at Syracuse netted the home team a 19 to 3 win.

Coach Davison has been handicapped by dearth of material, especially in the heavier weight classes and deserves praise for the strong finish of the team.
